Twenty years ago the Mirarr people, Traditional Owners of parts of Kakadu as well as the Jabiluka and Ranger uranium deposits, invited thousands of protesters to Kakadu. 1998 was the height of the decade-long and ultimately successful campaign with tens of thousands across Australia adding their voices to support the Mirarr and stop Jabiluka mine. On World Environment Day, June 5th 1997, Mirarr carried a giant "Stop Jabiluka Mine" banner up the escarpment on the mineral lease. This iconic public message hung in full view of the highway for many months. Tens of thousands of tourists learned the word Jabiluka and the Mirarr made their intention to stop an unwanted mine on their country absolutely clear.

In July 1997 over 60 students from across Australia travelled from the Students of Sustainability conference in Townsville to Kakadu to participate in a Week of Action on Mirarr country. The Mirarr took the students to the Jabiluka lease and Ranger uranium mine and held a public meeting in Jabiru. This event sowed the seeds of the Jabiluka Action Groups (JAGs). The national JAG network was a key element of the campaign and actively engaged a diverse group of people right around the country.

Stop Jabiluk's

STOP

Mining

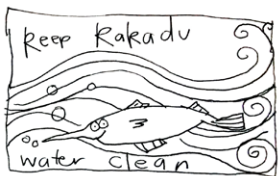

The nuclear free hand symbol is a powerful and widely recognised piece of resistance art that was created for the Jabiluka campaign by Melbourne based artist Kathleen McCann. After starting life in Kakadu it is now widely used around the world to highlight opposition to uranium mining and the wider nuclear industry.

“ The power of the symbol has grown from its acceptance by people wanting to signal their support for Mirarr and for other anti-nuclear causes. It has become a vehicle for an unequivocal anti-nuclear message. One of my proudest moments remains seeing the hand symbol unfurled on a giant banner dwarfed by Kakadu’s overwhelming escarpment. I designed an image but the anti-nuclear movement has taken the hand symbol and generated an icon – an enduring symbol of resistance and a simultaneous celebration of community. ”

The corporate campaign was a vital part of stopping the Jabiluka mine. Campaigners targeted investors in North Limited including Westpac and ANZ. Shareholders in North Ltd - ERA's parent company - called for and achieved an extraordinary general meeting on Jabiluka. Despite the company's efforts to stop it the extraordinary general meeting was held in October 1999.

Rio Tinto purchased North Ltd in August 2000. The change of ownership signalled a new approach by the parent company and paved the way for negotiations regarding the future of Jabiluka. The fate of Jabiluka is now firmly in the hands of the Mirarr Traditional Owners.

Mirarr and their supporters took the Jabiluka story to many countries. In 1998 Mirarr Senior Traditional Owner Yvonne Margarula, Gundjeihmi Aboriginal Corporation staff Jacqui Katona and Christine Christophersen and Dave Sweeney (Australian Conservation Foundation) undertook a speaking tour. The group was involved in more than 40 events including the European Parliament (which passed a resolution against Jabiluka), German Parliament and German nuclear utilities. In London they addressed public meetings, met with politicians and campaigners and gave a joint press conference with renowned comic and author Ben Elton.

Yvonne and Jacqui were awarded significant international prizes including the Goldman Environmental Prize (Islands and Island Nations), the Inaugural Nuclear Free Future Award and the Friends of the Earth International Environment Award. Mirarr received significant support from US politicians Nancy Pelosi and Cynthia McKinney who along with 37 members of US Congress wrote to President Bill Clinton in 1999 urging him to support the campaign to stop Jabiluka.

In a world first Yvonne Margarula addressed the World Heritage Committee in her own language about a World Heritage 'In Danger' assessment for Kakadu. This resulted in a high level Mission to Kakadu which recommended work at Jabiluka be suspended on the grounds of threats to Kakadu's World Heritage values.

Construction at Jabiluka started in 1998 with a 1.2km tunnel to the ore body, the extraction of 50,000 tonnes of mineralised rock and the construction of an interim water management pond. In January 1999 the company suspended operations. On August 12th 2003, following Rio Tinto's 2001 commitment not to proceed without Mirarr consent, backfill of the Jabiluka tunnel started. The return of such large volumes of uranium-bearing rock was unprecedented and widely welcomed. Major rehabilitation works ended in late 2015 and weed, fire and water management remain an ongoing responsibility for ERA.
